Ad Hic Haec Hoc Committee meeting--third (and we hope last) meeting. (4/14/45) STATINTL

STATINTL 1. Ed decided on what the cover should be this time. As drawn up by John

STATINTL [REDACTED] this cover will center [REDACTED] land hemisphere intersecting a circular shield featuring an eagle's head surrounded by some fairly vicious looking spikes which my informants tell me represent the compass rose, outside of which are the words Central Intelligence Agency. It is designed to be in bronze, the background to vary according to the type of report, the letters

STATINTL to match the device. [REDACTED] will prepare an example of it some time this week, and we propose to submit it as our recommendation for covers as described in report on meeting #1. (I was not thrilled to the core over the cover, but believe it won't make too much difference as what we'd probably find out no matter what we submitted would be what the thoughts of Authority are on the matter. Having found that out, we can ~~xxxx~~ devise something that will meet

STATINTL their requirements.)

2. [REDACTED] had found out that while the Warning and Dissemination Notice will have to stay inside the front cover, the rest of the stuff can probably be printed on a fly leaf. This would accomplish the objectives of improving appearance and saving money, so we shall recommend it.

Ad hoc meeting April 9

STATINTL

1. We didn't get very far beyond where we were before. Despite [REDACTED] argument that the covers should have more variation, committee held to general idea of a like cover with color variation.

2. Since nobody had come in with a new idea as had been planned, the discussion was more or less guided by the double-globe cover [REDACTED] had with him. Consensus seemed to be that we'd use that only that one hemisphere would be replaced with some sort of device in the nature of a shield for CIA. It would be something that could be used as a seal eventually but it would not be referred to as such.

STATINTL

3. At meeting 4/19 ideas will again be submitted.

STATINTL 4. Note to [REDACTED] call [REDACTED] about possibility of reducing printing on covers.

OK. RJS

1949?

Record of conversation with Mr. [REDACTED] subject of maps in ORE 22-49 ^{STATINTL}

1. They have thousands of hours in the project and are proud of ~~it~~ the results. Cancellation in any form would be unthinkable from their point of view.
 2. Reduction in size now planned (26X40) would make the maps virtually illegible and useless and would furthermore add to the expense of reproduction.
 3. Folding of maps at present size into published ORE would add to the same a bulk equivalent to about 100 pages and, through folding, would make the maps less usable for most recipients.
- ~~It~~ [REDACTED] believes that most of those receiving maps will want to hang them on the wall (they are unclassified) which furnishes a further reason for not folding. Ideally, they ought not to be folded at all and should go out either in a large enough envelope to take them flat or in a tube.
5. It seemed, therefore, that if they are going to be considered a part of ORE 22-49, they will have to accompany it in a separate package. I made the suggestion, however, that if this still offends you too much, it would be possible to have the maps issued separately as a publication of D/Map, a note to be included in the ORE to the effect that they exist. Bob agreed to this method if it happens to interest you. Obviously, this doesn't really get us anywhere as we have, in effect, a supplement anyway, but it might have one other virtue in that the value of these maps will be mostly to agencies ~~xxxx~~ that are not authorized to receive classified material. The little plain package could go to any of them, marked in such a way that they would be in no way associated with ORE or with CIA if you liked.

6. As I suspected, the maps are going to be far more valuable than the report. There are five of them, by the way, and they contain all the important information that appears in the 250 pages of supplement only in more usable form.
